ILL-TIMED MERRIMENT.

It Is Not Wise to Jab a King in the Ribs or Laugh at Him.

London Answers.

It was awkward for the czar's confidential adviser, Baron Endorff, a month ago, that he had not a quicker control over his features, for a laugh at the wrong moment lost him his high position and £12,000 a year.

While the royal suite was at Compiègne, soon after the arrival, the czar was tired and a little irritable, by the effects of the long journey. While going through the big hall, which was crowded with courtiers, a wolfskin coat that lay on the highly polished floor, slipped and struck the czar's head. He nearly broke himself and his standard-bearer to the ground, but he just managed to avoid a fall. The spectacle was rather ludicrous, especially in such a stately personage; and when the rather irritated monarch turned round, he found his favorite Endorff indulging in a grin of amusement, which he could not suppress.

The czar, who detests levity on state occasions, spoke very sharply in an undertone to the culprit, who, next day, was dismissed and relegated to an assistant secretary, with the duty of having to do with the "Argyle" and "Cygne" French kid gloves justly acknowledged to be the best gloves made in France.

These gloves are exclusive in style, absolutely correct in fit and come in all the fashionable colors. It is only necessary to sell a customer one pair to gain her as a regular customer.

But the Kaiser, on the whole, is the most dangerous person to laugh at or before, and more than one person has done for him in this way. A German nobleman, Gough Milbank, who is the clever, but bluff Scottish diplomatist, once asked the Kaiser to command the Sultan Abdul Din's troops and manage the Arabian finances.

The Kaiser took him up, four years ago, as a guest, with a view to making use of his services in the German empire, and had decided to give him a fine position in the East, to guard against the possibility of his going to the service of the Sultan.

The Kaiser said to him, "You are a very well set up for life."

At one of the audiences given at Potsdam, Milbank was giving the Emperor the benefit of his experience and receiving his orders, when the Kaiser made a rather abrupt suggestion to the diplomatist, proposing to win the confidence of the Japanese and Kurile Islanders with presents.

Milbank, bursting into a guffaw, asked the Kaiser if he thought the Japanese were long niggers, who could be bought over with six pennorth of glass beads and a flintlock gun? The Kaiser froze at once, wished Milbank good night and never repeated relations with him.

The moral is, when you are chatting with a German nobleman, a King, and dig him in the ribs. A still more amusing case of this kind was the mistake of another Scottish diplomatist, Duncan McVeia, who was next to McLeavy Brown, of Corea, the most famous of wandering Government agents, and who supplies 30 per cent. of the world's population with opium, as well as its engineers.

McVeia was one of the most pleasant, but touchy monarch, the King of Portugal, who had proposed to put the rather shabby diplomatist into a ruffian's hands, to let him do as he pleased, and pull the finances together. This would have been a big step, and most some $300,000 to the famous adventurer; but he had too much of what Scotsmen are supposed to lack—sense of humor. At any rate, it was the ruin of the finest prospect he ever had.

The King became a little excited and irritable at the various common-sense objections that McVeia, knowing what he was talking about, opposed to some of the monarch's plans, and though the King speaks admirable English as a rule, when excited it becomes a very odd mixture indeed. This finally, so worked on McVeia's feeling that he smiled audibly, with the result that he was promptly ordered away, and the Cape Verde still lack a Scottish Governor to look after their affairs.

It was a very different and much more dangerous trouble that Hackett Joice, a great fireman, got into through laughing at a wrong moment, and nearly cost him his life. This happened during the forefathers' strike at Sheffield, when fifteen thousand men were out of work, and great misery and starvation resulted, even for six years ago.

Joice was the spokesman of the congress of employers, and it was mainly owing to him and his powerful personality that the same episode happened at Grimsby even when the rest of the masters were willing to give way. Joice had a great brain, and was as hard as the iron he dealt in; and he was anything but popular with the men, who looked on him as the chief cause of their troubles.

He spoke at a big mass meeting of the workmen, and was not prophetic. Some voices in the crowd advised him, rather than to press them too far, for his own sake. Joice laughed about contemptuously, with the result that the overworked, half-starved crowd broke into an uproar, stormed the platform, and handled the master so severely that he was only rescued in time to save his life.

As it was, he was crippled, permanently, and had a bitter lesson not to laugh at the wrong time. By an odd chance, almost the same episode happened at Grimsby only a few weeks ago, when an ill-fated laugh and retort fired the fishermen to wreck the employers' offices.

AUSTRIAN CODE OF HONOR.

A Civilian Suffers Severely for What Is Excusable in a Soldier.

London Telegraph.

The absurdity and wickedness of dueling has been more dramatically illustrated than in the duel fought by two citizens of Vienna a few days ago. A handsome woman of thirty-five, Mne. Loewenfeld, the wife of the junior partner in a large manufacturing firm, mother of a boy of thirteen, had for two years carried on an illicit liaison with a lieutenant of Hussars, Benno von Soyke, meeting him clandestinely at his rooms and seeing him openly in her husband's home. About a week ago the husband was informed of his wife's doings, surprised her in the lieutenant's rooms, and insisted the officer. The wife declared she would not return to her home, but would go to her parents and wait for a separation, when she would marry her lover. The officer wrote to the outraged husband, whom he felt he could not challenge, a letter saying that his regiment had been transferred to a garrison in Hungary, but that he would wait for his orders until the 15th of the month. The husband understood the hint, and sent his seconds. The two met in the military riding school, where all duels are fought in Vienna. The offended husband had the right to fire first, but being quite inexperienced in firearms he refused to do so. The officer's first shot missed fire. The pistols were changed. Loewenfeld fired, and missed his adversary; then the officer fired, and the pistol again missed fire. After this Loewenfeld just raised his weapon, pressed the trigger, and the lieutenant lay dead, shot through the heart. Loewenfeld was in utter despair, but his own and his adversary's seconds assured him he had acted in the most gentlemanly manner throughout the whole duel, all the details of which were correct according to the strictest code of honor.

Ten years' imprisonment would probably be the least punishment that would be inflicted on the civilian duelist. He has, however, left the country to escape the ignominy of the trial and imprisonment. Had his opponent killed him the consequences would not have been serious. Subject to military jurisdiction only, the officer would have escaped with very slight punishment, because, by accepting the challenge, he had only done what, according to military notions, he must do. Had he refused to fight the outraged husband he would have been discharged, would have been considered a coward by all his comrades, and would have been avoided in all social circles.
